PRESIDENT'S HANGER

November already. Time has a way of flying by. Many things need to be done soon. I will be looking for volunteers.

Last month was a tragic month for many people. The fires took many lives and homes. My sister and brother-in-law live in Big Bear City and had to evacuate they spent the better part of the week here. They were aloud to return to their home that had been spared. I am sure that many of you knew someone that was threatened by the fires. I hope they came through it well also. The fun fly was rained out. Not good for the fun fly but good for helping to get the fires under control. There is no time left to reschedule. Sorry.

We must be doing something right every day I have been by the field. It looked like we were having some sort of an event going on. "Boy this place is getting busy". However, that is what it is there for. I again want to thank all of you that pitching in at both of our flying fields to do whatever it takes to keep them up and running.

Remember I said we need help soon. For the Christmas parade, we need a three-wheeled electric golf cart and a tandem axle trailer flat bed about 16 feet long they need to be in good shape. Your help in this matter will greatly be appreciated.

So until next time keep you tail high in the turns and happy landings.

When Your Plane tries to Tell you –

Once upon a time a member had a new pattern plane. On the first few days of flying it, everything was fine. But one day, on the first flight, it required several clicks of down trim (odd...) after take off — and after each turn or maneuver, the pitch trim would be off again (VERY odd...). Only when it took full down stick to fly inverted (JEEPERS!) was the member smart enough to realize something was wrong. After landing, the problem was obvious: He had not bolted the wing to the fuselage!

But the plane DID “try to tell me”; the member just wasn’t listening. Only new, tight-fitting wing dowels had saved the plane from destruction — it certainly wasn’t the pilot! Recapping later, the member thought of a number of things that would have caused similar symptoms: servo or servo tray loose, bad servo centering, broken elevator hinges, loose control horn, etcetera. The point is, ALL of those things are BAD! And with the plane not behaving properly, WHY did he keep flying??

Just suppose you’re getting an occasional glitch from your radio; something that doesn’t normally happen. This could be an antenna problem; it could be metal-to-metal vibration causing home-grown interference, or a loose crystal. Will any of these get better while you keep flying? And speaking of vibration, what if you start hearing it in the air? It’s your plane talking to you — loose muffler, engine mount, worn wing dowel holes, loose cowl mounting. Again, such problems don’t get better, only worse.

One more example — this has happened to all but the most careful pilots. Your engine goes lean and sags at the top of a loop. It’s TELLING you that the mixture is too lean. But you don’t listen and keep flying; a minute later, while doing another loop, you’re suddenly dead stick!

The sky gods know — we have enough problems that pop up suddenly, and we don’t have any opportunity to prevent them. Other times the plane “tells you” that there is, or will be, a problem. Unless you really enjoy repairing or rebuilding — LISTEN! Cutting a hop short to check out a possible problem is much quicker (and vastly cheaper) than building another plane!
